Chemical Safety: At Work and At Home

This course will cover the health effects of chemicals found in the workplace and in the home. Successful strategies for evaluating and reducing exposures, communicating risk and responding to spills will be presented. Information on the toxicology of common household products will also be provided. Registration for the course is $175 before Oct. 8 and $205 after that date. Please contact Julie Schmitz, 206-543-1069, for more information.

The University of Washington will offer professional credits.

Keynote Speaker

Seventeen-year-old Ron Heagy looked forward to basking in the sun while visiting a friend during a vacation in Southern California. What he didn't anticipate was the catastrophic surfing accident that would make him a quadriplegic. Now in his thirties, Ron is married, has a Master's degree and travels across the country sharing his incredible story of triumph over tragedy and the importance of a positive attitude over adversity.

Retrospective Rating Symposium: Hearing Loss – Can You Afford It?

This program will cover what an employer can do to limit liability to this costly exposure.

School-to-Work Program

Designed for students and teachers, this special program focuses on the safety and health of young workers. Students can attend the conference as guests when accompanied by a teacher or advisor.

WISHA Regulatory Update

WISHA will provide an update on changes in workplace requirements during the last year. This update will include requirements related to steel erection, protection of ground personnel from vehicle traffic on construction sites and other recent rule changes.

Learn how to access and explore the Web for the State of Washington and Labor and Industries, including RCWs and WACs. Access your own e-mail, if you have a universal account, such as MSN Hotmail.®
Sponsored by Hewlett Packard.

Lifesaving Awards

The Lifesaving Awards recognize personal acts of heroism by workers who rescued others from life-threatening circumstances. The awards will be presented at the opening session Wednesday morning.

5th Annual Forklift Rodeo

Skilled forklift operators negotiate a challenging driving course that includes realistic tasks and hazards. Come witness the best as they compete for the state championship.

29th Poletop Rescue Competition

This competition simulates the critical rescue skills utility crews must master – and hope never to use. The top four teams compete October 30 in this annual contest of skill.

Dick Frost Comedy Magic Show

Thursday's luncheon speaker, Dick Frost, combines humor and magic to captivate and entertain audiences young and old. Conclude your conference experience with Dick Frost's illusion and make-believe.

Job Opportunities Booth

Learn about the variety of jobs at the Department of Labor and Industries. In particular, information about safety/health-related positions will be provided.

2002

51st Governor's Industrial Safety and Health Conference

Every year over 3,000 safety and health attendees representing the diverse industry base of Washington state receive the latest information to make their workplaces safer.

"The Worker's Conference"

Safety and Health in Changing Times

Thousands of workers are injured and more than 100 Washington workers die from job-related injuries each year. Many of these injuries and losses are preventable. This conference is full of the latest ideas, information and tools to help you resolve complex safety and health issues, and design and maintain a sound safety and health culture at your workplace.

The benefits include reduced injuries, less time lost from work, money saved on industrial insurance premiums and an increase in profits. Comprehensive safety skills will benefit you far beyond the workplace.

The conference has numerous presentations, workshops, and panel presentations featuring noted speakers and personalities.

Reserve your space. Complete the registration form inside and mail it today! (Advance registration must be postmarked by Oct. 9, 2002.)
